Certification Mark Text

BACnet protocol is a data communications protocol designed to enable interoperability among automation and control system components for commercial buildings in applications such as heating, ventilating, air-conditioning, lighting and other building systems. The certification mark is to certify that the person authorized by Applicant has manufactured products whose building automation network communication functionality meets the requirements determined by the Applicant and subject to Applicant's approval. The BACnet protocol, which defines mechanisms for building automation devices to exchange information and commands, independent of the particular building service they perform, is an international standard (ISO 16484-5) and is widely implemented in new construction and building retrofit projects. Certification of devices for conformance to the BACnet protocol is guided by its corresponding international test standard (ISO 16484-6). If the device passes the test (ISO 16484-6) and meets Applicant's other administrative requirements, then the device manufacturer can use the certification mark. A copy of the ISO is on file.
